“If someone is gay and he searches for the Lord and has good will, who am I to judge? We shouldn’t marginalize people for this. They must be integrated into society.”

— Pope Francis, 2013

THE BEST OF THE WORST
CATHOLIC BISHOPS ACROSS THE COUNTRY

Salvatore Cordileone
Archbishop of San Francisco, Calif.
Cordileone has openly characterized same-sex attraction as “self-destructive” and is a leader in Courage, which encourages lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people to abstain from sex. An influential proponent of Proposition 8, Cordileone also has spoken out against the Employment Non-Discrimination Act and civil unions and has called marriage equality “harmful to individuals and to society as a whole.” In 2014, HRC condemned his statements in support of a constitutional amendment banning marriage equality, where he called such legislation “the only remedy in law against judicial activism.”

John Nienstedt
Archbishop of St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn.
“Those who actively encourage or promote homosexual acts…formally cooperate in a grave evil and, if they do so knowingly and willingly, are guilty of mortal sin,” Nienstedt said in 2007. “Surely they must be aware that they have turned their backs on God and the standards of God in their quest to make evil look so attractive.” He has said that, “Homosexuality must be understood in the context of other human disorders: envy, malice, greed, etc.,” and that it “is a result of psychological trauma.” When an anti-marriage equality amendment was on the Minnesota ballot in 2012, Nienstedt used more than $600,000 of church funds to support the amendment. The amendment failed, and the state legislature passed marriage equality shortly thereafter, for which Nienstedt blamed “satan.” Recently he has come under investigation over alleged sexual misconduct with other men, including other priests, a charge he denies.

Dennis Schnurr
Archbishop of Cincinnati, Ohio
Schnurr is an outspoken opponent of marriage equality. In response to the recent 8th Circuit Court of Appeals’ deliberation on marriage equality, he said, “The law in our state was a constitutional amendment strongly supported by Ohio’s bishops in 2004, and for good reason. Traditional marriage, the union of one man and one woman for life, is the basic building block of society.”

Charles Chaput
Chaput has been a vocal opponent of marriage equality and has suggested that it harms the children of same-sex unions. When Pennsylvania courts struck down the Defense of Marriage Act, Chaput described the decision as a “mistake with long-term, negative consequences,” expressing hope the decision would be successfully appealed “to defend the rights of children and contribute to the well-being of the larger community.”

Cardinal Francis George
Archbishop of Chicago, Ill.
In response to a planned gay pride parade that would pass by a Catholic church, George said, “You don’t want the gay liberation movement to morph into something like the Ku Klux Klan, demonstrating in the streets against Catholicism.” (2011) The Human Rights Campaign responded by condemning the comments on the blog. George apologized after there were calls for his resignation. In 2013, he said that same-sex marriage legislation in Illinois was “acting against the common good of society.”

Johann Willibrord (Willie) Schnurr
Archbishop of Cincinnati, Ohio
Schnurr is an influential proponent of Proposition 8. In 2004, Schnurr signed a letter to members of Congress opposing ENDA, expressing hope the law would be successfully appealed “to defend the rights of children and their families.” In 2012, Schnurr signed a letter to U.S. senators in 2013 opposing ENDA.

William Lori
Archbishop of Baltimore, Md.
Lori called the passage of marriage equality in Maryland in 2012 a “wake-up call,” encouraging Catholics to “redouble our efforts to defend marriage, to preach about what marriage is.”

Thomas Paprocki
Bishop of Springfield, Ill.
When Illinois passed marriage equality, Paprocki characterized it as “contrary to the plan of God” and held an exorcism “in reparation for the sin of same-sex marriage.” In reference to marriage equality, he said, “We must pray for deliverance from this evil which has penetrated our state and our church.”

Joseph Kurtz
Archbishop of Louisville, Ky.; President of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops
Kurtz gained prominence among conservative Catholic leaders by being a leading voice against marriage equality as chair of the conference’s committee on same-sex marriage, which he has characterized as this generation’s Roe v. Wade. Kurtz also started a local chapter of Courage, which encourages celibacy among LGBT people. He was one of three bishops who signed a letter sent to U.S. senators in 2013 opposing ENDA.
